was cultivated with success there, as well as in the Canaries, and soon after the sugar of these islands, particularly Madelm, was greatly preferred to that of any other country.

Soon after Columbus discovered the New World, one Pierre d'Etienne took the sugarcane to Hispaniola, afterwards called San Domingo, and now, Hayti. A Calalonian named Michael Ballestro, was the first who expressed the juice from it, and Gonzales de Velosa the first who concentrated this into sugar. The latter built a mill on the river Nigua, at his own expense, and sent for workmen from the island of Palms (one of the Canaries), to manufacture the sugar. The cane flourished extremely well in St. Domingo, for in 1518 there were twenty-eight manufactories on the island, and the produce was so considerable that the port duties on the sugar imported into Spain from St. Domingo, furnished the funds for building the magnificent palaces of Madrid and Toledo, which were erected in the reign of Charles V. Antwerp, about 1500, received sugar from Spain, which had it from the Canaries, and also from Fortngal; the latter country deriving it from St. Thomas, and other islands on the African coast and from Madeira. Sugar was also an article of import from Barbary.

Early in the seventeenth century the sugar trade in the island of St. Thomas, was as a sugar trade in the island of St. Thomas, was as a sugar trade in the islands of the country the sugar trade in the island of St. Thomas, was as a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas, was as a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas, was as a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas, was a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas, was a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas, was a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas a was a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas a was a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas a way as a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas a way as a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas a way as a sugar trade in the islands of St. Thomas a way as a sugar trade i process of refining sugar, the insurance offices resisted the claim, and a celebrated trial took place, in which one half of the most eminent chemists and scientific men of the day gave evidence diametrically opposite to the other half. The point was decided against the losurance offices, but so dangerous was the process considered, that no refinery has, since then, been constructed on the same principle. The scientific discrepancies on this occasion were so great, that they elicited a merited reprobation on the part of the presiding judge, who remarked that scientific men had done themselves no credit that day. I believe the occasion mentioned was the last when Professor Farsday gave evidence in a court of justice.

In ISSS, Mr. Cleland took out a patent for improvements in sugar refining, which wholly applied to the evaporation and concentration of the syrup.

Of recent years numerous other novel applications have been introduced; chief among which are the important improvements introduced by Dr. Soffern, in 1849. In reference to these improvements, it is proper to remark, that they did not consist in the employment of sugar of lead, but in the separation of sugar of lead employed, infailibly and absolutely.

In the year 1857, sugar was imported in considerable quantities in a state before un-

and absolutely.

In the year 1857, sugar was imported in considerable quantities in a state before unknown in this country, under the name of "Melado," as it is called by the Spaniss planters in Guba. It consists of the canopice defecated and bolled down, when instead of being poured into paus and allowed separate by granulation into sugar and molasses, and to free itself of the latter by drain-lasses, and to free itself of the latter by draining, the whole is turned into casks and in that state shipped. In the course of the voyage the natural separation into sugar and molasses takes place to a greater or less extent, according to the degree to which it has been boiled.

The melado question is very important. There are some who argue that the crystallization of sugar should not be attempted in the localities of its production. They aver that true economy would dictate the concentration of sugar-cane juice into a mere ex that true economy would dictate the concentration of sugar-cane juice into a mere extract (melado), the latter to be dealt with in home refineries. Others have come to the conclusion diametrically opposite:—viz., that if proper appliances of manufacture were brought into use in sugar-growing countries, there would be no occasion for home refineries. In reference to this debate it may be confidently averred that general propositions have been too unhesitatingly loid down. All must depend on special conditions, which vary for each separate sugar-producing region. Balancing the testimony dispassionately, I believe the true avernment will be that loaf and lump sugar cannot with advantage be turned out in the Colonies; but, on the other hand, any variety short of loaf or lump could, under a proper application of resources, be more profitably manufactured in the Colonies than at home.

Tobacco and Baldness.—A Tough Story.
Dr. Hoffman argues in the Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal, that the use of tobacco, by impeding the circulation and preventing the free and natural supply of nourishment to the hair, occasions baldness. In support of his theory he says

by impeding the circulation and preventing the free and natural supply of nourishment to the hair, occasions baldness. In support of his theory he says:

"A gentleman under forty years of age, and a patient of mine, who had been in the habit of using tobacco to excess for many years, and who was for the last five or six years both bald beaded and gray haired, found it necessary a few months ago to quit the use of tobacco outlrefty. He has entirely recovered his health; which was bad while he used tobacco; the has also recovered entirely from his baldness, and his 'gray locks' have been replaced by an unusually luxuriant growth of natural hair, of as fine a black hue as one could wish to see; he has also lost that sallow, becswax hue of skin and sickly paleness of color which slaves to the weed most generally have. All of this might be expected as a very natural result, except the growth of hair and lisc change of color, which, in this case, at least, has occurred as one of the results of leaving a noxious habit."—S.
